Machin Farmstead
Mount Savage
Private

1901 - 1903

Only out buildings remain standing on the Machin farmstead. The stone foundations of a farmhouse and a summer kitchen-smokehouse building are clearly visible. A small bank barn, a blacksmith shop, a stone "cave," and some chicken coops remain standing.

Between 1901 and 1903 Thomas Machin built this farm on property he acquired from James Sharpe. Machin was employed at local mines as a blacksmith. Straphinges and latches on several of the outbuildings were hand made by Machin.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Only outbuildings remain standing on the Machin Farmstead. The stone foundations of a farmhouse and a summer kitchen-smokehouse building are clearly visible. The "L" shaped farmhouse was one and one-half stories tall and contained six rooms and a bathroom. It was a frame structure covered with german siding. A porch was located on the facade and on one side of the building.

The small bank barn is a frame structure covered with horizontal plank siding. It rests on a coursed ashlar stone foundation. The gable roof of the barn is covered with corrugated metal. Eaves consist of rafter ends. A large vertical board door on the southwestern-facing facade of the barn opens on metal runner. A shed roofed board and batten addition abuts the northeastern elevation of the barn. Vertical board doors on the northwestern and southeastern elevations of the addition have original machine produced strap hinges and handles.

A blacksmith shop to the northwest of the barn is a one story frame structure with board and batten walls. It has no foundation. The gabled roof is covered with corrugated metal and tarpaper. Eaves consist of rafter ends and a fascia. Most window openings are empty but some windows on the southwestern elevation of the building have various six light sashes. A chimney which serves a small forge inside the building has a cap of white glazed bricks. A stone "cave" built by the Machins in 1938 has a hand made metal door and an "all-year" spring to cool the interior. (see interview)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Machin Farmstead is located on a 28 acre tract purchased from the Union Mining Company by James Sharpe in 1891 (Liber 88, Folio 719) Sharpe built a dwelling on the property. (Tax Assessments) in 1901 Thomas Machin purchased the property for the sum of $900.00 (Liber 90, Folio 34)

Thomas Machin was a blacksmith, farmer, clay miner, and coal miner who came to this country from England at an early age. His son, Gilbert, remembers that most of his father's work was at the mines, and at one time his father worked at the blacksmith's shop at the Keeley mine in Morantown. Between 1901 and 1903 Thomas Machin built a house, a barn, and a blacksmith shop on the property he acquired from James Sharpe. The Blacksmith shop was built with material taken from the Sharpe House which was dismantled. In later years, a "cave" and many outbuildings were erected on the farm. The strap hinges and latches on many of the outbuildings were handmade by Thomas Machin. An old tram road which reportedly led to a Union Mining Company ore mine on Big Savage Mountain traveling through the farmstead. The farmhouse was destroyed by fire in 1976. (Interview)
